
The National Longitudinal Surveys at ASA

NLS Papers & Presentations prepared for the 111th Annual Meeting of the American Sociological Association

August 20-23, 2016 | Seattle, WA | Washington State Convention Center

The National Longitudinal Surveys (NLS) are nationally representative surveys designed to track the life experiences of several US cohorts over time. The surveys collect data on employment, schooling, fertility, family processes, household structure, marriage, cohabitation, income, mobility, intergenerational transfer, health, child development, attitudes, nonnormative and criminal behaviors, civic engagement, aging, and more. The National Longitudinal Surveys of Youth (NLSY) are ongoing.

Papers are listed by day and time. Please check the program for location.

Elizabeth C. Cooksey, Steve McClaskie, The Ohio State University – NLS all cohorts.

The first National Longitudinal Survey respondent was interviewed in April 1966. Over the past 50 years there have been 7 different longitudinal surveys that have collectively interviewed close to 54,000 respondents with approximately 730,000 interviews and thousands of variables across a wide range of areas of interest to sociologists. Three of the NLS cohorts are ongoing and there are plans to reinterview members of two others. If you have never used the NLS before or you have, but feel a little rusty, then this is the workshop for you! Elizabeth Cooksey (PI of the NLSY79 Child and Young Adult surveys), and Steve McClaskie (head of User Services for the NLS program) will give a brief overview of the various NLS datasets, bring you up to date on new developments, and provide hands-on instruction for how to search for information and download data.
